A View from the Summit...

"Tales of the Quip"

by Bill - Cumming Location

Quip n. A clever, witty remark, often prompted by the occasion. That is the dictionary definition. I find that to be woefully inadequate. The quip is far more than that. A truly good quip is a near religious experience that leaves the victim mired in stammering confusion and the witnesses rolling in hilarity. There are few things in life that I enjoy more than a good quip.

Being in the restaurant business, I find myself with myriad occasions to practice the art of the quip. Not a day passes that I don't get a chance to use a one-liner of some sort. Many victims are innocent bystanders asking simple questions:

Q "Excuse me, Where is your bathroom?"

A "It's just through my living room on the right."

CAMRA: Marketing Beer to Women

As a result of market research in Britain that found 1/5 of women believed beer to be "old-fashioned" and 1/3 believed beer to be "unfeminine", CAMRA is launching a new campaign to interest women in beer. They're adopting the ancient goddess - Ninkasi - said to be one of the earliest brewers of beer - 3,500 years ago.

As a part of the campaign to change women's perception of beer, CAMRA is also featuring 10 "female friendly ales" at this week's Great British Beer Festival in London. 45,000 beer lovers are expected to attend the festival.

Q "Can I ask you a question?"

A "I'm not sure what the judges are gonna think but that sounded interrogative."

Others are not so innocent but think themselves rather clever:

(When an older gentleman was carded)

Q "My ID? Boy, I'm old enough to be your father!"

A "Maybe so but you ain't ugly enough."

(Then after ordering a second round)

Q "Do you want to see my ID again?"

A "I don't know. Did you get any younger since I carded you last?"

Some are just out there:

(After asking where the bathrooms are and being directed with a finger point and verbal instructions to walk to the windows and take a right)

Q "The windows..??"

A "Yes sir that would be the transparent part of the wall directly in front of you."

Perhaps the best liner I ever heard came from an obviously overworked underpaid bartender who was being harassed by a customer about their food and had had enough.

Q "Hey! It's been 10 minutes already. How much longer?"

A " Did you bang your head on the Golden Arches walking through that door? This isn't Macdonalds!"

Beer Spotlight of the Week

This week we shine on Cantillon Rose De Gambrinus. Try one at your favorite Summits today!

Cantillon Rose De Gambrinus

Region of Origin: Brabant, Belgium

Style: Fruit Lambic

It looks like a rose wine, but has more complexity than most. With its fine sustained bead, a pink Champagne of the beer world perhaps? In Belgium, it is typically served in a Champagne flute. Definitely a beer, too - the name Gambrinus derives from Jan Primus ("John the First"), 13th century ruler of Brabant, who in many parts of the world is the legendary "King of Beer." Several brews in different countries are named after him. This one has a remarkable fruit aroma, carrying through into the palate, with a delicate, lactic acidity gradually developing. It is a blend predominantly of raspberry lambic (framboise) with a smaller proportion of cherry lambic (kriek). Some editions have also contained tiny proportions of elderberry, and vanilla pod. An elegant drink with which to greet guests at a party...and one of the world's great beers.

Industry News

Sick of Hangovers? Try a 'Volcanic' Pill

LONDON (Reuters) - Forget black coffee or fried breakfasts. Salvation for hung-over drinkers may have arrived in an unlikely new form -- volcanic rock.

A British firm is about to market a new cure for hangovers based on lava-formed stone imported from Turkey and Australia.

"We were researching this for cancer patients to help with the side effects of treatment, but we have found out it works really well for hangovers," Dr. Kenneth

Maule, of the English firm Global Health

Products, told Reuters.

The volcanic dust, or zeolite, acts as a natural detoxifying agent and has already been used internationally for purifying water, treating animal feed and attending victims in Bulgaria of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster.

"It resides in the gut and will attach itself like a piece of velcro to all the toxins and poisons you don't want in your body," Maule said. "You just urinate the problem away."

Maule, who has developed the zeolite into a product called Zetox, said he was forming a new company, Good Morning, to sell the capsules in Britain exclusively for drinkers.

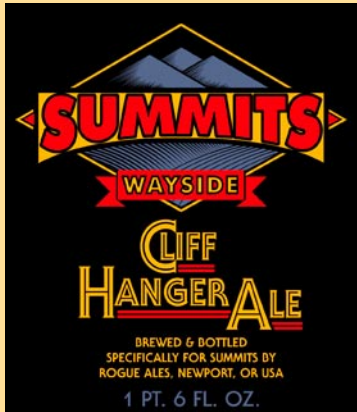

Six pills before going out drinking should be enough to ward off hangovers for the average person on a normal night of, say, four or five pints of beer, he said.

"But if it is going to be a deadly night, add two capsules for every extra four pints," Maule said. "And if you're heavy, take a few extra to start with."

Zetox is already for sale on the Internet at 19.95 pounds ($31.22) for 120 pills, and could be offered in pubs, clubs and shops around Britain within weeks if Good Morning is a success.

Did You Know ???

Prohibition Beer

Many breweries stayed in business during the Depression and Prohibition by manufacturing and selling malt extract. Brewers sold malt as an excellent additive to foods to increase vim, and vigor, but it was actually used to make beer. Many manufactures included the recipe to make beer on the label. Manufactures selling malt extract included Anheuser-Busch, Coors, and Pabst.

"Where else can you find you such good beer? So brown and stout and healthy, too! The porter's health I drink to you!
Yes, hurrah the hops, and hurrah the malt, They are life's flavor and life's salt!"
