Cold Tea

Pete Gagne - Manager - Cumming

It's 1:45 am in Boston and "Sweet Child 'O Mine" is playing on the jukebox. They've just given last call at The Pour House or The Bell In Hand (the oldest bar in Boston) or The Sweetwater Café. What do you do? It's been such a great night that you don't want it to end. Unfortunately, Boston shuts down at 2 am. There's nothing left to do but go home. Wrong! It's time for Chinatown!

The only place in Boston where you can drink after 2 am is Chinatown. In particular, a Chinese restaurant at 24 Edinboro St called Moon Villa right smack in the middle of Boston's Chinatown. At 2:30 am there is typically a 45-minute to an hour wait for a table. The wait sucks because you stand outside in line. There was always a huge putrid puddle in the street right in front of the restaurant.

Come to think of it, there was usually a puddle in the bathroom as well. I certainly don't remember any health inspection scores being posted. It's amazing what you'll overlook at 3 am just to get some more beer, and beer is why you're here.

Only it's not called beer, it's called "cold tea". Yeah, at 3 am, Moon Villa's got the best tea in the city! When you finally sit down and the server asks you what you'd like to drink, you order "cold tea". If he doesn't recognize you, he may look at you a little funny and ask what you mean by "cold tea", you then just give him a knowing look and order "cold tea" again, only a little slower, "Cold tea" please.

I've had "cold tea" served a number of ways. Sometimes, it actually comes in a tea pitcher with teacups. Most times, they just bring out those plastic amber cups (...continued on page 2) with beer in it. Other times, you'll get a brown bag with cans of beer in it, which you keep under your table out of sight. On the few occasions when I saw a police officer stroll through the restaurant, there really wasn't any problem because everyone was drinking tea.

The real bonus about Moon Villa is that the food is great! The "cold tea" is like a bait and switch. To this day, Moon Villa has the best Kung Po chicken I've ever had. Moon Villa's Lo Mein is the standard that I measure other restaurant's Lo Mein against. If you really wanted to make a statement, you could order Sizzling Beef, which wasn't on the menu. It would come out sizzling and smoking like a Fajita. The whole place would stop and look when that smoking platter came out!

As I became more of a "regular", I wouldn't even have to wait in line. My number would miraculously be called in front of others. My nickname was "Tony Curtis". There really is nothing like leftover Lo Mein the morning after to help settle the stomach and ease that "cold tea" headache. Sure beats Backstreet!

Beer Spotlight

Sierra Nevada Porter

Dark and rich, Sierra Nevada Porter is a delicious, medium-bodied ale with a creamy head. The Porter's smooth flavor (malty with hints of caramel) comes from a blend of deep-roasted barley malts.

Did You Know?

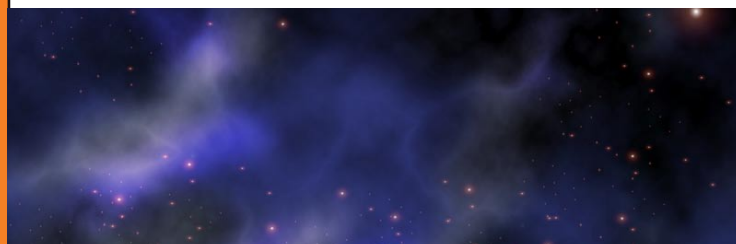

Most vegetable, and virtually all fruit juices, contain alcohol.

There are 83 dry towns and villages in Alaska.

In West Virginia, bars can advertise alcohol beverage prices, but not brand names.

There is a cloud of alcohol in outer space with enough alcohol to make four trillion-trillion drinks. It's free for the taking. . . but it's 10,000 light years away from Earth.
